

Prairie Creek twists through the Wallowa Valley, which was referred to by Chief Joseph as the “land of winding water.”

Wallowa Band Nimiipuu (Nez Perce) descendant Allen Pinkham Jr. and his granddaughter paddle the first Nez Perce style dugout canoe to launch on Wallowa Lake since Chief Joseph's time. Ponderosa pines much like the one it was carved from dot the west lake moraine behind them.

A Nez Perce tribal fisheries worker holds a Chinook salmon netted from the Imnaha River that has a large sea lion bite taken from its abdomen.

Tribal members skip rocks near the site of Celilo Falls, now flooded over by the slackwater behind the Dalles Dam. Power lines from the dam can be seen in the background, as well as the location of the falls.
